

San Miguel de Allende, Guanajuato, Mexico

Construction of a new mission church

Church members from the neighboring city of Cortazar have begun a house church in San Miguel de Allende.

The new congregation is ready to begin construction of a sanctuary, a parsonage, and a fellowship hall.

The community is an unusual blend of affluent expatriate North American retirees and a growing community of local workers who have moved in seeking jobs.

Land is being acquired for the construction. There is no other church of any kind in this growing new neighborhood.

Many local citizens are artisans who sell their crafts to tourists.

The adjacent housing areas are made up of government housing and an expatriate retirement community.

San Miguel de Allende is a beautiful city with many historic sites and opportunities for learning more about the history of this part of Mexico.
